

Her diction included symbolism toward her and her emotional breakdown.

with we

The symbolism of the diction of the text connects the wording together to describe Daisy as well as her emotions further. In the beginning of the text, it states, "...found her lying on her bed as lovely as the June night in her flowered dress..." Through this evidence, we can assume that the time of when this is set is around summer time. In paragraphs 2, 3, and 4, the story includes much vocabulary related to water, wording such as "cried and cried", "cold bath", "Seas", and "drinking". With all things put together, we notice that the character's name is Daisy, a type of flower, and the time of year could be summer, which is known for having flowers bloom, and the water-related wording in the text relates to all this because plants need water. In other words, Daisy can be described as a flower that's overwatered, due to that fact of the high mention of water in the text. If a flower is overwatered, then it starts to wither and rot, which could describe how Daisy feels after reading the letter, beaten-down. Another idea that the overwatering symbolism creates would be that Daisy is spoiled, as the man she is about to marry is wealthy.

Wow... Amazing!

Wealth plays a major role in the story. With information further from the text, we know that the letter was from Jay Gatsby, a man who is in love with Daisy, and at the time of writing